

Montana Historical Society Press Release—
Lee Metcalf Photograph and Film Collections CLIR Grant Project

Montana Historical Society announces the “Lee Metcalf Photograph and Film Collections Project”

The Montana Historical Society Research Center is excited to announce the receipt of a two-year private grant from the Council on Library and Information Resources (CLIR) for a project to arrange, preserve, and describe the photographs and films of the former U.S. Senator from Montana, Lee Metcalf. The grant’s funding has provided for the hiring of a full-time project archivist, Matthew M. Peek, who will work for the duration of the project in the MHS Research Center’s Photograph Archives under the direction of its manager, Lory Morrow. The project began in April 2013, and will run through the end of March 2015.

Although the MHS Research Center has processed and made available the Lee Metcalf Papers (MC 172), the senator’s photographs and films came to MHS in several deposits over the past thirty years, largely without description or organization. Most of the photographs and films were housed in and used by Metcalf’s office staff during his time in the U.S. House of Representatives and the Senate. A substantial number of individuals and congressmen seen in Metcalf’s photographs are unidentified, inhibiting the collection’s usefulness to the public at present.

The objectives of this project will be to unite all of Metcalf’s photographs from the various donations in one photograph collection to allow for better access, as well as to re-house all the photographs in appropriate archival enclosures. The films will be researched, preserved, and re-housed as well. The CLIR grant provides the resources necessary to spend time researching, identifying, and preserving all of the materials individually in these two collections. The work completed in the arrangement and description of these collections will help to inform future projects related to Lee Metcalf, such as the upcoming 50th anniversary of the Wilderness Act of 1964, for whose passage Senator Metcalf was largely responsible.

The first year of the project will be spent working on the photograph collection, and the second year will focus on processing the film collection. The collection will be accessible in the spring of 2014, when the photographs should be fully described and preserved. Once completed, the finding aids for the Metcalf Photograph and Film Collections will be available through the Montana Historical Society Research Center, the Northwest Digital Archives, and the Montana Shared Catalog.

This project will allow for greater access to a vital visual resource documenting the history of Senator Metcalf and other Montana congressmen in relation to Montana politics; environmentalism and conservationism; education advocacy; civil and equal rights; Native American relations and the return of rights to Native Americans; and other major issues and events of the mid twentieth century.

Updates on the project, including short historical pieces on Metcalf using interesting photographs from his collection, will be made periodically on the MHS blog Montana History Revealed and in various MHS newsletters and publications. It is the hope of MHS that teachers, students, universities, scholars, and the general public will benefit greatly from the increased access to Metcalf’s photographs and films at the completion of this project.

NEWS FROM MONTANA

MONTANA REP CAITLIN PATTERSON

Donna McCrea shared sad news from Montana. Teresa Hamann, Archivist at the University of Montana's Maureen and Mike Mansfield Library, passed away on April 15, 2013, following a 14 month battle with cancer. Teresa had worked for the Library's Archives and Special Collections unit since August 2000. In addition to creating exhibitions, processing collections and providing excellent research and reference services, she was the unit's lead worker and student supervisor. She received her BA from the University of Montana and her MA in History from the University of Oregon.

The Montana Historical Society Research Center's Photograph Archives has received a two-year private grant from the Council on Library and Information Resources (CLIR) for a project to arrange, preserve, and describe the photographs and films of the former U.S. Senator from Montana, Lee Metcalf. The grant's funding has provided for the hiring of a full-time project archivist, Matthew M. Peek. Formerly the corporate archivist for Airstream, Inc., in Ohio, Peek has a B.A. History from Kentucky Christian University, a M.A. Public History (archival studies emphasis) from Wright State University (Dayton, OH), and is finishing his MLIS Digital Archival Preservation from Kent State University.

The project began in April 2013, and will run through the end of March 2015. The first year of the project will be spent working on the photograph collection, which contains over 4,000 photographs. The second year will focus on processing the film collection, containing over 300 film reels. Once completed, the Metcalf Photograph and Film Collections will be available for research at MHS Research Center, and the finding aids will be accessible through the Northwest Digital Archives and the Montana Shared Catalog.

This past winter, the MHS Photograph Archives received a photograph album containing 128 black and white photographs of Fred Knobel; his friends and family; and his homestead in West Butte, Montana. This album includes a great photograph of men and some children collecting snow on Mount Jean to be used for making ice cream for the Fourth of July.

Kermit Karns donated 40 black and white film negatives he took of Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) Company 956 at Camp Taft F9 in Haugan, Montana. Views include the medical staff and corpsmen. One interesting photograph is of Nurse Betty Johnson working with Camp Surgeon Albert Shershow in saving a life of a pneumonia victim; unfortunately, the patient would later die.

Introduction

With the advent of the modern news photographer in the later years of the 1930s, initiated by numerous New Deal programs and projects, the outbreak of World War II, and more high-quality portable cameras, official photographers for U.S. Presidents and congressmen became the norm in mid twentieth-century politics. Thomas McAvoy, working for Time magazine, began taking action photographs of the re-elected Franklin Delano Roosevelt in Washington, D.C., in 1933 with his Leica camera, while the other photographers waited for a professional, posed photo op with FDR.¹ This moment marked one of the greatest departures in the way photographers covered politicians and the U.S. Congress up to that time. By the late 1940s, when President Harry S. Truman's famous photograph of him holding the newspaper headline "Dewey Defeats Truman" was photographed by three news bureau photographers assigned specifically to Truman, the idea of the "modern news photographer" came to fruition. Many of these early pioneering photographers got their careers launched through working for Kodak testing early color photography, while a number of these photographers got their experience during World War II military campaigns and the photographic coverage of the liberation of Nazis concentration camps.

The development of specialized press and marketing photographers, such as Ardean Miller III, who created the famous public image of Pan-AM and Airstream, Inc., with his gorgeous color Kodachrome photographs, sparked the imagination of politicians.² They began believing that having the photographs deliver their message and image to the American people and their constituents would be the next best step in public relations. By the early 1950s, members of the U.S. Congress' two main political parties—Republicans and Democrats—had begun hiring or requesting their own press photographers to cover events, hearings, and meetings amongst congressmen. By the mid 1950s, this practice was becoming commonplace: “In 1955, Arizona Republican Senator Barry Goldwater, himself an amateur photographer, hired Arthur Scott to work for the Republican Senatorial Committee.”³ Later in 1975, Scott would become the first U.S. Senate Photo Historian. The Republican Party would be the first political party to formalize this practice of Congressional photography by the late 1950s. Now, the Democrats in the U.S. House and Senate realized they must play catch up.

From 1956 to 1958, several U.S. House of Representative members, tired of not getting their agendas passed through Congress or approved by the Republican President Dwight D. Eisenhower, began discussing the formation of what would become in 1959 the Democratic Study Group (DSG), to mobilize and coordinate efforts to enact progressive policies and programs. Prior to the formal DSG, the group, led by Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota, was known as “McCarthy’s Mavericks.”⁴ The two co-founders of the Democratic Study Group were U.S. Representative from the First District of Montana, Lee W. Metcalf, and Representative Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota. William G. Phillips was appointed the DSG staff director, and Lee Metcalf served as the first chairman of the DSG.⁵ The group became extremely influential in the 1960s throughout the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives, particularly during John F. Kennedy's 1960 presidential campaign and the 1964 Civil Rights Act debate. Congressmen Hubert Humphrey, Eugene McCarthy, Lee Metcalf, John F. Kennedy, Robert Kennedy, Edward Kennedy, Mike Mansfield, Daniel Inouye, and other politicians that defined the 1960s and 1970s were involved in some way with or were members of the DSG. With such a centralization of power and activity, the DSG sought to match the Republicans as far as publicity by hiring their own professional photographers in the early 1960s.

U.S. Senate Democratic Studio and Its Photographers

A former famous Associated Press and International News Photos photographer by 1962, Al Muto had been one of the three press photographers on the train with President Harry Truman in 1948 to photograph the famous image of Truman holding the "Dewey Defeats Truman" newspaper headline.⁶ While a press photographer, Al Muto covered some of the greatest political and sports events in United States and world history, including covering Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin during the Army–McCarthy hearings of 1954 and Senator Lyndon B. Johnson in the 1950s. Al had also had been prior to 1960 an official U.S. President photographer on occasion. Al Muto was part of the White House Photographers Association, and his brother Tony Muto was president of that association during the 1950s (Tony died in 1964). After being laid off from the Associated Press sometime between the late 1950s and the early 1960s, the U.S. Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee hired Al Muto to be the official Senate Democrat photographer.

In the 1964 Democratic National Convention reports, Al Muto is named as one of the finest Capitol photographers in history.

Shortly after Al was hired, it appears the Democrats also hired his brother Frank Muto, equally competent as a photographer and a movie camera operator. The Muto brothers had worked together for years in the press prior to the 1960s. Frank had early in his career earned a somewhat dubious reputation for himself. In 1937, he had worked for Modern Screen magazine and took scandalous images of Joan Blondell in stages of “undress” that went against Motion Pictures Producers and Distributors of America’s standards for studio-approved images.⁷ In the 1930s and at the outbreak of WWII, Frank Muto worked as an International News Photos (part of William Randolph Hearst’s company International News Service) photographer. He was one of the last photographers and Americans to leave Warsaw, Poland, during the Nazis’ bombing campaign of that city in September 1939.⁸ Before working for the Senate Democrats, he was a principle photographer of Senator, Vice-President, and President Lyndon Johnson; this connection with Johnson is one of the most likely reasons the Senate Democrats hired he and his brother Al. During his time covering Johnson and working for the Senate Democrats, Frank’s title was “Senate Democratic Policy Committee photographer.”⁹

Additionally, the U.S. House of Representatives Democrat Photographic Studio photographer Dev O’Neill would take the occasional photograph of a U.S. Democratic Senator during various Congressional events. After 1972, when technically both Republican and Democratic Senate studios were combined, Dev O'Neill had begun doing some work for the Senate Photographic Studio. Copies of Dev O'Neill's photographs are present in the photograph collection of Senator Lee Metcalf.¹⁰ From comparison of numerous U.S. congressmen's photograph collections around the United States, it appears O'Neill was active as a U.S. House photographer primarily from the mid-1960s until at least the early 1980s.¹¹

Al Muto's title in the 1960s was "Photographer—Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee."¹² Between 1962 and 1972, the Senate Democratic Photograph Studio operated in the U.S. Capitol building. Evidently, as part of several factors that included a reorganization of Congressional committees and subcommittees to eliminate waste and improve efficiency in the early 1970s, the Republican and Democratic photograph studios of the Senate combined under one institution. This new U.S. Senate Photographic Studio fell under the oversight and management of the U.S. Senate Sergeant At Arms, along with the Senate's Recording Studio for

An excerpt from an oral history with the former Inspector for the United States Capitol Police, Leonard Ballard, mentions Muto and a typical photo op in 1964 with former President Truman: "BALLARD: 'Oh, yes, Truman . . . Now, I have a picture of Truman that was made on his eightieth birthday [May 8, 1964]. He was up at the Senate Reception Room. They had had a Masonic convention over at the Marriott Hotel. He came up to the Capitol the next morning, the day of his eightieth birthday, up to S-207. And had his picture made with quite a few candidates . . . that old publicity job. They brought some House members over. Truman said that he would like to have one with me. I reckon that Muto [the Senate Democratic photographer] was taking it. Everybody got back. He and I shook hands. Of course, Muto gave me a copy. Humphrey was there and he told me if I wanted it autographed, to bring it to his office up on the third floor and he'd send it back to Independence to have it autographed. But, I just never did.'" filming Senators' constituent reports, congressional session reports, and other press and publicity matters needing to be recorded on film.¹³

In 1972, the U.S. Senate combined their photographic studios into one. Still, Al and Frank Muto worked as separate "Democratic" photographers for the Senate. According to a Congressional Quarterly report by Donald Smith, reprinted in 1974 in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette and Daily Capital News (Jefferson City, Missouri), "Democrats and Republicans maintain separate staffs and darkrooms in the basement of the U.S. Capitol."¹⁴ As part of an expose showing the unfair usage of public funds spent on the Democratic photographers and their studio operations, Donald Smith provides us with this useful information on the Senate Democratic photographers: "According to payroll records, the Senate paid chief Democratic photographer Frank P. Muto about $30,700 last year [1973]. His brother, Alfonso A. Muto, received $22,000, and a laboratory assistant received $7,600. A fourth man on the staff who served as a laboratory assistant was paid from campaign funds."¹⁵ The Republicans had two primary photographers, one of which has already been mentioned: "Senate Republican photographers L. Clyde Wilkinson and Arthur E. Scott earned $20,900 each last year The Republicans have two laboratory assistants who were paid $16,600 each."¹⁶

Of particular interest, Smith denotes how the photographic studios operated, and why the Congress paid for their operations:

Although the salaries of House photographers are paid from party funds, they also receive free office space in the Rayburn Office Building. The photographers spend most of their time snapping pictures of senators posing with visiting constituents in their congressional offices or on the steps of the Capitol. The prints are then mailed to the constituents as goodwill gestures — and hopefully as vote-getters around election time. The two staffs also take pictures of senators participating in ceremonial events on Capitol Hill — from official receptions to charity drives. These photographs, along with captions, are sent free to newspapers in the senators' home states for publication as news photographs. According to one estimate, the combined output of the Democratic and Republican photographers working for the Senate is from 2,800 to 3,200 negatives per month, and as many as 16,000 prints a month. Cameras, film and supplies are financed from party campaign funds, according to Senate officials. At one time the Senate photographers, like their House counterparts, were paid salaries from party funds. But in 1962, they were switched over to the public payroll, where they qualify for such fringe benefits as group insurance and pensions. The switch was made under the aegis of then Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson, who used the photographers extensively himself, according to knowledgeable sources.¹⁷

Getting angry over the line of questioning by the Congressional Quarterly reporter, Al Muto responded during an interview as follows: “Alfonso Muto accused Congressional Quarterly of being ‘on a witch hunt.’ ‘We take pictures of Democratic senators, that’s all,’ Muto said. ‘We’re both [Al and Frank Muto] former news photographers. We’re not political hacks here.’”¹⁸

How Senators Communicated with Democratic Photographic Studio

As one of the founders of the Democratic Study Group and the permanent acting President Pro Tempore in the U.S. Senate from 1963 to 1978, Senator Lee W. Metcalf of Montana made extensive use of the Senate Democrat Photographic Studio (SDPS). At present, approximately 25% of the Senator’s roughly 4,000 photographs housed at the Montana

Historical Society Research Center's Photograph Archives are known to have the mark of Al Muto, Frank Muto, or Dev O'Neill on the back of the photographs, or simply the "Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee Official Photograph" (one of several official titles for these Democratic photographers). In an informal conversation with the first professional archivist to arrange a U.S. Senator's papers (Senator Metcalf), former University of Montana archivist Dale Johnson recalled from his time in Metcalf's office between 1970 and 1978 that the Senate Democrat photographers took the images on request from the Senator's office and kept all of the negatives. They would make prints and return them to Senator Metcalf.¹⁹

Metcalf would contact the Democratic photographers for special events or meetings of Montana constituent and advocacy groups at the Capitol. The photographers would take the photograph, and the Senator or his staff would order prints in different sizes for various purposes. Often times, Metcalf's office had pre-arranged lists of newspapers in the state of Montana to which copies of photographic prints would be sent for publication and publicity; there was a similar practice for the Senate Recording Studio regarding audio and film recordings. It is not known whether the Senator's staff sent the prints out, or if the Photographic Studio did this, though the Congressional Quarterly investigative report from 1974 mentions that the studios would send out photographs for the senators.

Each of Senator Metcalf's original negatives—maintained by the Democrat Photographic Studio—has written on the negative sleeves notations for sizes and numbers of prints to be made for the Senator. The photographic collection of the other Senator from Montana in the 1960s, Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (held by the University of Montana-Missoula Archives), also has a great amount of correlation with Metcalf's photographs as far as type of events photographed by the SDPS and their photographers.²⁰ When needing copies of negatives either held by the SDPS or by Senator Metcalf's office staff, Metcalf's office would send a letter to the Mutos or Dev O'Neill requesting such services: "The Democratic Study Group, of which I [Lee Metcalf] am an alumnus, would like two 8 x10 glossies of each of the enclosed negatives. I'll appreciate a separate bill, because DSG is going to pay it."²¹

Summary: Lee W. Metcalf (1911-1978) served as a Montana state congressman, assistant state attorney general, and a Montana Supreme Court associate justice between 1937 and 1952. From 1952 to 1961, he was a U.S. Congressman from Montana; in 1961, he became a U.S. Senator, serving until his death in January 1978. The photographs in this collection depict all aspects of Metcalf's life and service in public office, including images of his time in various Montana state offices, as a U.S. Congressman, and as a U.S. Senator. Images from Metcalf's personal life are included, showing Metcalf's ancestors from Maine and Massachusetts, his early life and school days, his wife Donna and their son, Metcalf's parents and their family, and scenes from his regular life outside of public office. The bulk of the collection is focused on the later part of his term as a U.S. Congressman through his many years in the U.S. Senate, from 1958 to 1977. Originally housed within Metcalf's congressional offices, many of these images were used by Metcalf and his office staff from 1953 to 1978 for various publications, television and film recordings, congressional hearing exhibits, newspaper articles, and election and publicity materials.

CONTENT DESCRIPTION

The photographs are arranged into five broad groupings based on Metcalf's life and work, with the groupings in chronological order for the most part: Lee and Donna Metcalf Photographs; Montana State Government Service (1936-1941, 1947-1952); U.S. House of Representatives (1953-1960); U.S. Senate (1961-1978); and U.S. Senate Democratic Photograph Studio Negatives (1960-1978).

The Lee and Donna Metcalf Photographs comprise Series 1 through Series 4 of the collection. Series 1 shows scenes in Lee Metcalf's early personal life and portraits from his career as a U.S. congressman. Within this series is the only-known photograph of Lee Metcalf during his U.S. Army service in World War II. Series 2 contains photographs of Donna Metcalf's personal life and family, including snapshots she took documenting her work with Lady Bird Johnson's city and highway beautification movement in the 1960s and early 1970s. Series 3 details Senator Metcalf's life with his wife Donna Hoover Metcalf, their son Jerry, the Metcalfs' extended family, and family friends. Photographs in this series also include images of various Metcalf family trips and vacations. Series 4 contains photographs of Metcalf family ancestors from various New England states and several other locations across the United States, dating mostly from the 1860s through the 1930s. Many of these pictures were in photograph albums brought by the Metcalf family when they migrated to southwestern Montana from Maine in the late nineteenth century. Box 3, Folder 7 contains several portraits of Lee Metcalf's parents and their families prior to 1930.

The Montana State Government Service (1936-1941, 1947-1952) photographs comprise Series 5. It contains photographs of Lee Metcalf as a young assistant state attorney general and as a state Supreme Court associate justice. Highlights of these images including portraits taken in Metcalf's first and last year as a Supreme Court justice, as well as images of Judge Metcalf in his Supreme Court office in Helena, Montana.

The U.S. House of Representatives (1953-1960) photographs comprise Series 6 through Series 14. These images depict Lee Metcalf's work as a U.S. Congressman in the U.S. House of Representatives. Series 6 shows Representative Metcalf with various federal politicians, fellow congressmen, and members of the Montana congressional delegation. Series 7 contains photographs of Metcalf on various committees and conducting committee hearings around the United States, particularly as it relates to mine safety. Series 8 shows Metcalf at various public, professional, and political events outside of the state of Montana—primarily in Washington, D.C. Series 9 shows Representative Metcalf discussing legislation he supported in the House of Representatives.

Series 10 contains photographs dealing with and depicting various public projects supported or proposed by Representative Metcalf, which were funded or mandated through federal legislation, federal funds provided by the U.S. Congress, and through decisions of congressional committees responsible for various aspects of public resources and funds. Series 11 contains photographs of Metcalf with various Montanans—including state politicians—in Montana and in Washington, D.C., both in public and political settings. Interesting images in this series include Metcalf in Butte for several state Democratic rallies and events. Series 12 contains images of Representative Metcalf in general scenes around Washington, D.C., in his congressional office; and general topics related to Metcalf's regular operation as a congressman. Photographs from campaigns and award ceremonies are included in this series. Series 13 depicts Metcalf with Presidents Harry Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower at various events. Series 14 has photographs of Representative Metcalf with constituents from the state of Montana who visited him in Washington, D.C., as well as images sent by constituents to Metcalf.

The U.S. Senate Photographs (1960-1978) comprise Series 15 through Series 23. These images depict Lee Metcalf's life and work as a U.S. Senator. Series 15 shows Senator Metcalf with various federal politicians, fellow congressmen, and members of the Montana congressional delegation (most notably Senator Mike Mansfield). Series 16 contains photographs of Metcalf in various committees and conducting committee hearings around the United States. Meetings of and photographs used as exhibits in the following committees are part of this series: Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, Committee on Public Works, U.S. Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, various other committees, and views of Metcalf testifying in congressional committee hearings. Series 17 shows Senator Metcalf at various public, professional, and political events held outside of the state of Montana—primarily in Washington, D.C. Of particular interest in this series is a sub-series of photographs detailing the 1964 Montana Territorial Centennial Train's stop in Washington, D.C., and the subsequent Montana Centennial dinner in April 1964 with President Lyndon B. Johnson as a surprise guest. Series 18 depicts Senator Metcalf discussing, planning for, and holding bills he supported in the U.S. Senate.

Series 19 contains photographs dealing with and depicting various public projects supported or proposed by Senator Metcalf, which were funded or mandated through federal legislation, federal funds provided by the U.S. Congress, and through decisions of congressional committees responsible for various aspects of public resources and funds. Of particular interest in this series are working photographs of dam construction in Montana; photographs showing improvements on Montana Indian reservations; water resources management in Montana; and images used in committee hearings by Senator Metcalf while he worked to reform the forest management practices of the U.S. Forest Service. One important sub-grouping of photographs in this series are the original photographs used by and published in the 1970 report "A University View of the Forest Service," otherwise known as the Bolle Report. This report was one of the single-most important catalysts for ending federally-sanctioned deforestation practices in national forests, and changing the way the Forest Service managed the land and resources under its control. Photographs detailing efforts by Senator Metcalf to find a use for the shuttered Glasgow Air Force Base between 1964 and 1972 are also in this series. Photographs dealing with the early years of the Jobs Civilian Conservation Corps, Headstart, and the Peace Corps are also part of Series 19.

Series 20 contains photographs of Senator Metcalf with various Montanans—including state politicians—in Montana and in Washington, D.C. while in public and political settings. Politicians and political rallies from around the state of Montana can be seen in these images. Series 21 shows Senator Metcalf in general scenes around Washington, D.C. and his congressional office. Photographs of his office staff, from his political campaigns, from award ceremonies, and from various extra-legislative programs the Senator participated in are included in this series. A large number of pictures in this series document Senator Metcalf's time in the Inter-Parliamentary Union, which was the first permanent forum for political multilateral negotiations and legislative discourse amongst parliaments of sovereign states. Trips to the Korean demilitarized zone and to Russia in 1969 can be found here. Series 22 shows Senator Metcalf with Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson at various events, in political discussions, and during campaigns. There are also two photographs of President Richard M. Nixon in this series. Of particular note in Series 22 are photographs of President Kennedy during his run for the presidency in 1960, and during his visit to Great Falls as part of his September 1963 national conservation tour. Series 23 contains photographs of Senator Metcalf with various constituents from the state of Montana who visited him in Washington, D.C., as well as images sent by constituents to Metcalf. Views of Metcalf with Montana Native American tribal members and Montana representatives to national youth programs are particularly significant in this series.

The U.S. Senate Democratic Photograph Studio Negatives (1960-1978) constitutes Series 24. Series 24 contains over 960 film negatives from the U.S. Senate Democratic Photograph Studio, which were commissioned by Senator Metcalf between 1960 and 1978. Most of the images in this series were taken by famous American news photographer brothers Al and Frank Muto, who were originally hired by the U.S. Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee as the two main photographers for U.S. Senate Democrats. Previously, the Mutos had worked for Lyndon B. Johnson during his time as U.S. Senate, Vice-President, and later President. This series of negatives has been matched with original photographic prints from the collection, and the negatives and their corresponding prints have been treated as a separate unique collection of images within Lot 31. Significant images of Senator Metcalf around Washington, D.C., in committee hearings, with important politicians, with Montana constituents, and with his office staff are included in this series of negatives. Contact prints have been made for all the negatives, including those which have corresponding original photographic prints. All prints and contact prints have been numbered based on the numbers assigned to the negatives. The Senate negatives have been arranged chronologically by the date listed on the negatives' sleeves by the photograph studio staff. These dates were for when the negatives were filed by the studio's staff. Often, the filed date matches the date the images were taken; however, not all filed dates correspond to the dates of the actual event, particularly at the end of a given year. Occasionally, images taken in the last have of December of any given year were not printed or filed away until January of the following year.

ADMINISTRATIVE INFORMATION

Acquisition Information

The photographs in this collection were transferred to the Montana Historical Society in several phases. A set of photographs was received from 1972 to 1978 as part of the donation of the Lee Metcalf Papers by Senator Lee Metcalf to the Montana Historical Society Research Center. In 1986, those photographs were transferred to the Photograph Archives from the MHS Archives, after the organization of MC 72 Metcalf Papers was completed that year. In 2008, Donna

Metcalf, Lee Metcalf's wife, donated the majority of the photographs in Lot 31 to MHS. The bulk of these photographs were from Senator Lee Metcalf's original congressional photograph collection, and were stored in his congressional offices from the 1950s through January 1978. Also in 2008, the U.S. Senate Historical Office discovered a large number of photographic negatives originally located in the U.S. Senate Democratic Photograph Studio. The negatives were arranged in boxes by the U.S. congressman's last name. All the negatives received by the Senate Historical Office had been left in the original arrangement used by the Senate Democratic Photograph Studio. Several single-image transfers from other MHS Photograph Archives collections were made to the Lee Metcalf Photograph Collection during the processing of Lot 31.

Processing Note

The Lee Metcalf Photographs Collection is a composite collection from several separate donations between the 1970s and 2008. Between 1971 and 1972, Senator Lee Metcalf chose to deposit his congressional papers with the Montana Historical Society, though he would retain until the end of his time in the U.S. Senate all those records he required for his daily office work. Records he retained included his office's photographs and films. Between 1978 and 1983, the bulk of the photographs were divided somehow following Metcalf's death, with a large number of them coming into the possession of his wife and widow Donna Metcalf. 822 photographs were found stored in the Senator Metcalf's office files with corresponding paperwork. These images were separated from the Senator's papers during the processing of the Lee Metcalf Papers (MC 172), then transferred to the Montana Historical Society Photograph Archives in 1986.

In 2008, Donna Metcalf deposited over 2,000 photographic prints, negatives, slides, and miscellaneous images with the Montana Historical Society. After significant research and interview with former Metcalf Senate staff members, it was discovered that the images in the Donna Metcalf donation had been utilized by Lee Metcalf in his congressional offices during his time in the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate. Also in 2008, the U.S. Senate Historical Office located a large number of negatives in storage that had been organized by the U.S. Senator's name and arranged chronologically, according to the date the negative was filed by the staff of the U.S. Senate Democratic Photograph Studio. It appears the studio had been storing most of the negatives in the basement of the Old Russell Senate Office Building or the Rayburn House Office Building in Washington, D.C., in case a U.S. congressman wanted prints made from their negatives at any time in the future.

Lot 31 Lee Metcalf Photograph Collection was processed as part of a Council on Libraries and Information Resources (CLIR) "Hidden Collections" grant project, with generous funding from The Andrew Mellon Foundation, received by the Montana Historical Society in 2012. The goal of the grant project was the reorganization and uniting of all Metcalf images held by the MHS Photograph Archives from these previous donations, into a singular collection that most-closely replicated the original order and arrangement of the photographs and negatives as used by Senator Metcalf and his office staff.

USE OF THE COLLECTION

Restrictions on Access

Cora Green (seated), a Colgate Home Economist and Home Laundry Evaluation expert, shows a housewife how to use the test materials. This photograph was used as an exhibit photograph during hearings of the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution of the Committee on Public Works regarding Senate Bill 1479, to establish standards for biodegradability of detergents and soaps in water [circa March 1965] 02: William A. Kline, a Colgate-Palmolive Company Research Associate in charge of a water quality testing program, is seen checking a sample-pump, maintained at the raw sewage inlet of the Elm Farm Mobile Homes Park water treatment plant in Woodbridge, Virginia. This photograph was used as an exhibit photograph during hearings of the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution of the Committee on Public Works regarding Senate Bill 1479, dealing with establishing standards for biodegradability of detergents and soaps in water [circa March 1965]

03: C.E. Garber checks dissolved oxygen content of an aeration tank of a waste treatment plant in a make-shift laboratory during a water testing program by the Colgate-Palmolive Company. This photograph was used as an exhibit photograph during hearings of the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution of the Committee on Public Works regarding Senate Bill 1479, dealing with establishing standards for biodegradability of detergents and soaps in water [circa March 1965]

04: Interior of the effluent surge tank showing buoyant marker in place to measure the depth of foam from detergent in the water during the Colgate-Palmolive Company's water quality testing program in the Elm Farm Mobile Homes Park water treatment plant in Woodbridge, Virginia. This photograph was used as an exhibit photograph during hearings of the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution of the Committee on Public Works regarding Senate Bill 1479, dealing with establishing standards for biodegradability of detergents and soaps in water [circa March 1965]

05: Interior of an effluent surge tank after treatment of sewage containing linear alkylate sulfonate (LAS) detergents. Test made during the Colgate-Palmolive Company's water quality testing program in the Elm Farm Mobile Homes Park water treatment plant in Woodbridge, Virginia. This photograph was used as an exhibit photograph during hearings of the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution of the Committee on Public Works regarding Senate Bill 1479, dealing with establishing standards for biodegradability of detergents and soaps in water [circa March 1965]

06: Comparison of the degradability of alkyl benzene sulfonate (ABS) detergents versus linear alkylate sulfonate (LAS) detergents, shown in laboratory foam tests using graduated cylinders. Test made during the Colgate-Palmolive Company's water quality testing program in the Elm Farm Mobile Homes Park water treatment plant in Woodbridge, Virginia. This photograph was used as an exhibit photograph during hearings of the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution of the Committee on Public Works regarding Senate Bill 1479, dealing with establishing standards for biodegradability of detergents and soaps in water [circa March 1965]

11: Aerial view of Tiber Dam spillway and outlet works. More than 99 percent of the peak inflow of the June 1964 flood waters (154, c.f.s) passing this area was stored in Tiber Reservoir. Release of the stored water was delayed until after the peak flows of the Teton and Missouri Rivers passed Loma, Montana, at the mouth of the Marias River. Due to the existence of Tiber Dam, there was no damage in the valley downstream.
